Mount Mercy Holds Its First Student Art Show of the Year

Mount Mercy Academy unveiled its first student art show for the 2016-17 school year last week. The work of the students of accomplished art teachers Jacqueline Welch and Jennifer Licata are on display in the school's St. Catherine Gallery for the next six weeks. The Studio in Art One classes displayed "Zentangles", which are ink pen drawings that are meditative and doodle-inspired. Photographs taken by the digital photography students at Canalside as well as photograms are also on display. The Studio in Drawing and Painting students created charcoal sketches of still life objects, as well as an ink pen sketch of a tree from Cazenovia Park. In addition the class also created embellished driftwood sculptures and a "Zen" stone. Senior Allyson Pfeil (West Seneca) created a graphite self-portrait inspired by Frida Kahlo's famous self-portrait.
